User Definitions

It is important to remember that CareerPortal permissions are driven by user groups and are set up in a layered fashion to ensure that each user group encompasses the necessary permissions to efficiently and effectively operate the application according to their needs. With this being said, individuals must be tied to the appropriate user groups in order to perform the appropriate tasks. The only exception is the Applicant user group; all user groups automatically inherit the Applicant permissions by creating a CareerPortal account.

For example, if you have an individual who has the responsibility of reviewing and approving job postings in addition to actually posting jobs, then this individual should be tied to the Job Poster and Manager user groups.

The below table provides the tasks that can be performed by each user group.
